Wolverines kick off 2021 vs Buhl

by Philip A. Janquart

Weiser High School head football coach Tom Harrison holds Idaho's longest winning streak, at 54 and 34, and has led his teams to 10 state championships, another Idaho record.

He knows what it takes to win.

One of the key, not-so-easy to control, factors is avoiding injuries.

After witnessing his starting quarterback go down at critical moments during the playoffs the previous two seasons, he is hoping senior three-year starter Brett Spencer can stay injury free.

"Brett got hurt and we were short handed," Harrison said of Weiser's 34-8 quarterfinal loss to eventual 2020 3A State Champion Sugar-Salem.

The Wolverines, the No. 4 seed at the time, had season to be optimistic, beating No. 3 seed Fruitland 42-0 in a first-round, play-in game.

"The last two times we played deep into the playoffs, Brett got hurt. It's all about injuries. If you go into the playoffs, you have to be healthy," said Harrison who added that every player's health is a concern.

Spencer, a dual-threat athlete who makes plays with his feet, lost his mobility against Timberlake and was forced to throw from the pocket.

But, the past is the past, as they say, and if the present is any measure of the future, Brett Spencer is looking strong, hitting his receivers, displaying spot-on footwork and mechanics in summer camp and early season practices.

At first look, by a guy who hasn't seen him until this summer, Brett Spencer is good-natured and relaxed, yet competitive and quietly confident.

There have been no signs of lingering injuries from the previous two seasons when he strained his ACL against Timberlake in 2019, and when he separated the AC joint in his throwing shoulder against Fruitland in 2020.

This isn't his first rodeo, so to speak. He is a proven commodity and, if he can avoid any major injuries, could potentially lead his team back to the playoffs in 2021, and, God willing, even to a state championship.

"We are going to take things one game at a time, but at the same time, we all think we can win a state championship," said Spencer who has been talking to the University of Idaho, and other schools, about his future. "You can't focus on it too hard, but that's our goal. If we don't get that, it's not how we wanted our season to go. It's kind of a state championship or bust kind of thing."

Spencer lost one of his favorite targets from 2020, Kooper von Brethorst, to graduation. He wasn't activated until mid-season last year and was injured in the Wolverines' last game, but proved a valuable target when he was on the field.

Harrison, however, has a lineup of four receivers who will rotate in the offense's base two-receiver set.

Offense:

Payton Albertson, Evan Haggerty, Braden Walker, and Marco Garcia all have a chance to step up and become a preferred target, although Harrison said he wants all of his receivers to make plays.

"I think we are going to be stronger this year. There isn't a lot of experience in that spot, but we have four solid receivers out there for two spots," he said. "We also have some sophomores and freshmen, some younger kids pushing them."

Spencer will also be looking to brother, sophomore Brock Spencer, on short passes and downfield on long balls.

"He plays a, sort of, slot hybrid running back/receiver, so he'll be out catching the ball and running the ball," he told the Weiser Signal American. "There will be short passes, but some deep ones because he is probably one of our faster guys, and he can go up and catch the ball."

Like a typical brother, Brett wanted to set the record straight about his little bro.

"He might say he's 5-11, but he's probably more like 5-10 and 170 pounds," he said, smiling.

The offense will run spread and tight formations, according to Harrison.

Carlos Arana is the tight end.

The front five, as of Aug. 21, is center Malachi Hoobey (5-11, 180), with Rylee Willet (6-1, 240) at right guard and Jesse Lockett (5-10, 250) occupying the left guard position. Vying for the two tackle positions is Braden Phillips, Ammon Caviness, and Tristan McMahon, according to Harrison.

"My center and two guards have been with me the whole time," Spencer said. "We've been playing since sophomores together, so with those guys, it's been perfect. The two tackles have been different each year I've played. This year it's Tristan McMahon and Braden Phillips, so they are new guys, but they are coming along and getting the system down."

The big guys up front will be opening holes for a host of running backs, with Willy Shirts (5-9, 175) taking most of the snaps. There is also Chris Burke (5-8, 160) and Brock Spencer. Michael Youngberg and Maddox Stevens could see time carrying the ball, as well, according to Harrison.

"Jack Burke is another receiver/running back, but he is just amazing at running the ball," Spencer said. "Then Braden (Walker), Evan (Haggerty) and Payton (Albertson), they are all new guys to varsity, but they can all be pretty key players and I think they've made some big strides from spring ball."

Defense:

The Wolverines lost defensive mainstay Beau Shields to graduation. The 6-foot, 265-pounder signed a letter of intent in February to play for Southern Arkansas University.

Zander MacElroy and Lockett, however, are sure to shore up the middle of the defensive line, with Arana and Shirts on the ends.

Linebackers are Youngberg, Stevens and Willet, who received All-3A SRV first team honors as an offensive lineman and second team honors at linebacker in 2020. Willet played defensive end as a sophomore, but was moved to linebacker last season.

"I love middle blocker," he said during Weiser's June camp. "I get to flow around so much more and I get to hit so many more people. You have to have better vision, so I always have my head on a swivel, always looking to see where you need to go, where the ball is."

Brett Spencer and Payton Albertson are the safeties.

Chris Burke, Brock Spencer, Haggerty, Garcia, and Walker are vying for the corner spots, but Harrison said all five would see action.

Outlook:

Injuries can make or break a season, but if the Wolverines stay healthy, especially at the quarterback position, they have the potential to compete with anyone in the league.

"We have a lot of depth out there, but I would say we don't have a lot of depth at quarterback," Harrison said.

Spencer's lone backup is freshman Kolin Cook.

"We also have some experience; we have more seniors than we've had in the past. I've had these guys since they were freshmen, so this is kind of an important year for us," Harrison said.

"Our senior class this year, we are super tight. Rilee Willet and I have played together since freshman year, so varsity football isn't anything new to us, so I really think we can do some damage on offense and defense," Spencer said.

The Wolverines kick off the season on the road against Buhl on Friday, Aug. 27.

The 2021 Weiser High School football team: The Wolverines are going for broke after falling short in the 2020 state playoffs.

Boys soccer team returns six; 22 freshmen join program

Weiser High School boys' soccer team hopes to have a strong showing in the SRV this season. Coach Kathy Bokides is returning for her twenty-second year as head coach of the Wolverines with Zach Rose returning as an assistant for his tenth year.

The Wolverines will have only six returning varsity players, so Bokides will look for all of them to show leadership on the team.

Marcos Tarelo, Pablo Hernandez, Kasey Kautz, Brian Munoz, and Bryan Juarez have already shown their leadership in teaching the rest of the team difficult passing combinations throughout the summer practices.

Bokides said that the biggest thing the Wolverines need to work on as a team is communicating. Throughout the summer, Bokides has enjoyed watching her players come together as they worked on the team atmosphere that is needed for that communication on the field to come together.

With 22 freshmen, there is a lot of young talent, so a huge goal for the summer was to learn everyone's names and spend time getting to know each other and their individual talents.

"I really enjoyed watching how hard each player works and encourage the younger players," Bokides said.

Kasey Kautz said after playing together throughout the summer, each player has shown their own strengths that have set them apart from the rest, proving that everyone will be an important contributor to the team.

"Over the summer, Kathy has worked to make us more comfortable with the skills we need to improve on," he said. "She has also sought to improve our communication. With a team that has been playing together for so long,

Weiser High School boys' soccer players go through drills earlier this month. Most of the work was done going uphill, which helps to build the strength, stamina and endurance needed to get through a full soccer match. Photo by Nicole Miller we already have the bonds we need to have a successful season."

Partly because of young talent, Bokides expects the goals to come from a variety of players.

On defense, Diego Delgadillo and Justin Padilla will share the keeper/golier position.

Another big focus of the summer practices has been general conditioning and agility. Throughout the beginning of the season, the team has practiced twice a day with the morning practices utilizing the hills at Memorial Park. Jumping, lunging, and running all up-hill and even practicing yoga as a team will pay off in muscle strength and endurance throughout the season.

With Bokides' years of experience, she knows all too well the importance of that endurance through the long season.

The Wolverines are coming back from a strong season last year after taking second in the state tournament, but at the beginning of the 2020 season, the Wolverines started the season with three losses.

They had to learn from those losses and battle back. McCall took the district championship, but Weiser defeated Iduh in the play-in game to earn their spot at the state tournament. From there, they beat Sugar Salem in overtime with penalty kicks, followed by a victory against Gooding before facing Sun Valley Community School in the State Championship.

The Wolverines proved that they had the stamina not only to power through the overtime games, but to build on their skills and improve throughout the season.

The Wolverines were able to see district rival,

Payette, at the Meridian Invitational this summer. They were very excited to see the Pirates because they have been good competition in the past, but they did not have a team last year.

Bokides said they are once again looking pretty competitive.

The challenges will kick off right away for the Wolverines as their season opener is a home game against the Emmett Huskies, with an away game against Middleton the next day.

They are also looking forward to facing off against their Oregon rivals in Ontario and Baker City, as both teams did not have seasons last year due to COVID.

Another schedule change they are excited about is the chance to play their biggest state rivals, Sun Valley CS, during their regular season.

Lonberg brings pro experience to strong girls program

by Nicole Miller

The Lady Wolverines girls soccer team will hit the field with a large team of 41 players, filling the JV and varsity teams this fall.

The team is under the new leadership of Trine Lonberg who brings extensive professional experience as a player and coach.

Lonberg has been playing professional club soccer since 1981 and played on professional club teams in Denmark, Germany, and Norway, most recently playing with the Fremad Valby team in Denmark from 2012-2014 and again from 2016-2018.

In addition to her playing experience, Lonberg is a certified European soccer coach for both the B1 and B2 levels. She has coached all ages for both men and women for 35 years. Before moving to Weiser, she was the head coach of the Fremad Valby Women's team from 2015-2018. She joined the Weiser High School soccer program as the assistant coach in 2019.

Lonberg moved to Weiser in 2019, and when asked what brought her here, her answer is simple: "I call it Destiny," she says.

Lonberg said that the community of Weiser and the kindness of those who live here has really helped her feel at home.

Lonberg battled cancer in 2019 and 2020 and several people in the community, through both the soccer program and through Angel Wings Network, helped with her battle.

Lonberg said that even though she is a long way from her original home in Norway, she will not be leaving anytime soon. She sees the potential for a great program here in Weiser, as well as additional opportunities to help grow the recreational soccer programs in our local rural communities.

That's why, in addition to taking on the head coaching job at WHS, Lonberg also recently started a regional club team for the spring season.

Although the teams will be fairly large, with 41 players, she would rather find a way to help everyone be part of a team than cut players who are willing to work hard, she said.

Lonberg has been very impressed with the leadership and hard work she has seen so far on the field throughout the summer practices.

"You can't teach soccer in 11 weeks; what I want to see is improvement and hard work throughout the season," she said.

Lonberg said she doesn't like to worry about the number of wins and losses. She will practice hard with the girls, and they will focus on the skills that they can, but her most important focuses are having fun and being a team player. She will also be building a positive and uplifting atmosphere, focusing on sportsmanship and hard work.

Lonberg will be expecting plenty of leadership from her 11 seniors, most of whom have played for a long time. She hopes to take 22 on varsity, but said that she sees both teams as one team and will practice as one team, and cheer each other on as one team.

She does not expect to have any stand out players, but not because she doesn't expect them to do well. Lonberg expects all the girls to do well, in each of their positions, but makes clear that soccer is 11 vs 11, with every player on the field making a difference in the outcome of the game. She also said she has an eye for spotting talent, and had no problem matching each position with the right girl.

Kristy Bake will be the goalkeeper for the Wolverines this year. Bake is a senior and suffered an injury last year.

Lonberg said she expects the girls to work hard and focus at each practice, and then when it's time for the games, the main goal is to just do their best and have fun.

She sees her job as a coach as one of empowerment, teaching the girls that they have all the skills they need, and only need the confidence to know that they can think for themselves and remember that all they can control is their own effort, focus, and attitude when playing.

"If you only worry about improving, playing your best and having fun, there are no obstacles to a successful season," Lonberg said.

Mary Kramer and Kimmy Kelley will be joining the Wolverine coaching staff as Lonberg's assistant coaches. Lonberg said both bring a positive attitude and leadership experience to the team and have already shown that they will help create the empowering atmosphere the Wolverine team seeks to achieve.

New WHS girls' soccer coach Trine Lonberg, right, works with Roma Walker during a pre-season practice in August.

Seniors to lead Wolverines

by Zane Davis

Despite the sweltering temperatures outside, indicating summer is still in full force, the fall sports have begun at Weiser High School, and the WHS volleyball program is 34 strong and has three full teams of highly talented young women.

Head coach, Lindsey Grant, will be at the helm of the varsity squad for her fourth year, and will be added again by CJ Barnett as the assistant coach. Michelle Estes will continue to coach at the junior varsity level and Bailey Chandler is returning as the freshman and sophomore coach.

The Lady Wolverines have a deep bench of 13 players this year, led by three returning seniors: Ivy Morris, Whitney Cordes, and Emma Tolman. These three young ladies were coach Grant's first group of seventh graders when she began coaching in Weiser. She has been their coach for 6-years and expects big contributions from them in their final year at the prep level.

Taylor Bushing is another senior this year to the team.

Juniors Jasi Yraguen and Mattie Shirts will be returning this season and are expected to make a big impact in the hitting and blocking department.

Paige Johnson and Isabel Rodriguez will be making their debut at the varsity level this season.

Sophomore setter, Danica Lockett, will be back this season setting up her hitters for success. Sophomores Abi Wilkins, Bailey Coleman and Riley Roberts will be hitting the court on the varsity squad this year, and freshman, Paisley Noyer, will round out the 13-player team.

Coch Grant is very excited about her team this year. In addition to her core group of returners, she said that she has a lot of young players that she expects to be "big contributors."

Grant is looking forward to the season. She said her team is "talented, coachable and willing to make changes to be successful."

The Lady Wolverines will begin their season in a home pairing against the Vale High School Vikings on Thursday, Aug. 26, 2021 in the Tom Falash Gymnasium. The freshman-sophomore game begins at 4:30 p.m., followed by the JV and then the varsity.

A Weiser volleyball player winds up to spike the ball during a pre-season practice. This year's rosters consists of freshman Paisley Noyer; sophomores Danica Lockett, Riley Roberts, Bailey Coleman, Abi Wilkins; Juniors Mattie Shirts, Jasi Yraguen, Paige Johnson, Isabel Rodriguez; and seniors Emma Tolman, Ivy Morris, Whitney Cordes, and Taylor Bushing. Runners strive for mental toughness in 2021

by Philip A. Janquart

As with all athletes, runners must dig deep, utilizing a mix of mental and physical endurance to be successful.

Weiser High School cross-country coach Steve Hale said, however, that mental toughness is what brings runners across the finish line.

"It's definitely more important to be strong mentally to run. When you are running fast for a race, it is going to be uncomfortable and your body is going to want to stop, but you just have to keep going," he said. "Eventually, you learn just how uncomfortable you can be while still being able to give 100 percent without dying at the end. It's a fine line, and the best runners know how to get right up to that line without crossing it."

In his fourth year as Weiser's head coach, Hale said he expects his team this year will come closer to achieving that milestone.

The team has lost only two, Rachel Galligan and Emily Abramson, and there were no senior boys last year. Hale has talent that should step up in Galligan and Abramson's place.

"Libbie and Kendall Rynearson are always hard working athletes that seem to improve almost constantly," Hale said. "Kylee Quinton is a new athlete this year that has impressed me during our summer workouts."

For the boys, Hale said Colyer Chandler will be one to watch.

"He will have a good year, as well," he said. "He is always willing to do the little extra things that improve him as an athlete."

Hale is optimistic about the overall picture for both the girls' and boys' teams.

"I think both teams will improve this year," he said. "We've been running well over the summer and we've made more progress than at this same time last year."

Some of the things the teams have been working on include building strength, which lead to success.

"Obviously you need strong legs, that can just keep going," he said. "But having a good amount of core strength and a bit of shoulder and arm strength helps to keep your torso up and your lungs open in order to breathe better."

There are also strategies that runners use to advance past other competitors.

"Some runners will tail another runner they know is comparable to themselves. Others completely ignore everyone else and just run their own race," Hale said.

"In order to be the most efficient however, they need to be as consistent with their pace as possible. At the same time, they need to pay attention and adjust to the circumstances."

"The biggest factors being the course itself, whether it is flat or hilly, and the weather. The racer has to consider all potential factors in order to identify the fastest and most consistent pace they are capable of at any given meet. So it's hard to identify specific strategies that runners use because each race is different. Of course, the last 300 to 400 meters they should be picking it up in order to finish as strong as possible."

Running, he said, is one of the few sports athletes can participate in throughout their lives. Coach Hale offers his instruction to any high school athlete who wants to learn.

"Any high schoolers that want to learn how to run well so they can compete in races at any level they like, or simply to stay fit, for the rest of their life, are free to join us. We start practice at 4:30 p.m. in front of the auxiliary gym until school starts. Once school is in session we will meet in the same place shortly after school ends."

New stock breathes life into Titans in 2021

by Philip A. Janquart

It's hard to round up football players in small towns.

Cambridge has an estimated population of 320, down from 328, according to the 2010 U.S. Census Bureau. Midvale is even smaller, sitting at an estimated 159, down from 171, according to the government Census.

Kids in such communities are hard-pressed to find the time to dedicate to such a demanding sport while juggling class loads and, for some, work on the ranch or farm.

That's life all around Idaho's 1A Div. II Long Pin football league.

But Tri-Valley Titans head coach Justin Mink, following a dismal 1-5, truncated 2020 season, said he not only has guys committed to play, but who can potentially pose a threat to opponents.

"We have a chance to compete in this league and I'm so excited for the future, with the building blocks we have," he said. "Most of them will go both ways. We don't really have kids that seem to want to play football, but our sophomore class is a big class. They are about 10 of our 20 players, and we'll start a lot of them."

Though the team consists of young players, about 60 percent of them from Midvale this season, they come with a positive attitude and athletic ability that allows them to swap from offense to defense, which is how winning is done in Long Pin.

"The thing we've got going for us right now is that we are young and we have kids who can play multiple positions," Mink said.

Gone from the 2020 roster is tight end Nathan Kindall and defensive end Jarrett Mink, two former starters for the Titans.

There will be, however, four players expected to fill those roles, including sophomores Luke McHenry (6-2, 185), Clayton Harper (6-0, 165), Gage Warren (5-8, 150), Zane Nichols and junior Alyas Walker (5-7, 209).

In 2020, McHenry earned second-team All-League honors, along with Harper who was an honorable mention. Warren earned second-team Defensive Back, and Nichols and Charlie Gay both received second-team Receiver recognition.

Offense:

The Titans will run a pro-set and wing-T offense.

Although the quarterback position, as of Aug. 17, was yet to be finalized, Mink said the probable starter would be sophomore Zane Nichols. At 6-3 and approximately 175 pounds, Nichols offers good field vision and has a chance to prove his ability to make plays with his feet. As a first-time quarterback, however, he will need to keep his poise under fire, not allowing the defense to rattle him, and learn to read defenses while maintaining good mechanics.

"This is going to be his first year in that spot. He played in one game last year as a quarterback, as a freshman, and it was kind of rough on him, but he is tall," Mink said. "He's a smart kid and he'll be able to make some good decisions for us. As far as reading the defense, it's just going through that learning curve."

Warren and Logan Whitener (5-8, 120) are also possibilities at the quarterback position, and could take the helm depending on various game situations, but the Titans may need to reserve their services for other duties.

"It's just trying to fill in some other spots and making sure we've got people where we need them," Mink said.

The offensive line is set with four: junior Josh Martinez is new this year and has been running for the cross-country team, according to Mink, which is hard to believe considering his size at 6-0, 240-pounds, according to the team roster.

On paper, at least, it translates into endurance combined with power. In theory, Martinez should be able to outlast any defensive lineman the league throws at him.

However, on limited observation, he will need to learn the finer technical details of blocking, including stance and footwork, which is to be expected of a new player. He could prove to be a good one to watch as he develops down the stretch.

Juniors Blake Damon (5-9, 155), Heath Fortin (5-10, 190), and Alyas Walker (5-7, 209) are no slouches, either. The three should provide a combination of quickness and power.

Damon and Walker will fill the vital role of center, the non-so-often referred to "quarterback" of the offensive line. The center is the heart of the big guys up front, and having two who can play the position is a clear bonus.

Harper and Charlie Gay (5-3, 120) will get most of the hand-offs, with Gay displaying crazy quickness and sharp, side-to-side lateral movement in close quarters, and plain speed in the open field in the one training session observed.

"He's got a lot of speed and we want to sneak him outside and let him have the field," Mink said. "In eight-man football, usually all you have to do is break the corner and then it's one-on-one."

Defense:

Most of the athletes will serve dual roles on both offense and defense. McHenry is described as the team's "stud" at the linebacker position, which could also be said about Harper who fills that role as well.

"He packs a punch," Mink said of McHenry.

Outlook:

You never know what you are going to get with a young team, this one having only two seniors, but that's what makes it interesting and relevant. After all, it's not what your team did yesterday, as much as what it is going to do today and tomorrow, and it's that anticipation that makes the Tri-Valley Titans such a cool prospect. It's the ability to watch players develop over time, witnessing their highs and lows, and watching where it takes them.

"We've been in kind of a slump on kids who want to play football and have the drive to do it," Mink said. "But now we have kids ... there's just no quit in them whatsoever. Last year, when we were down by 30 in a game, they just kept fighting to the end and that's what I love about this bunch of kids."

"My philosophy? I want to win some games, but our focus is to grow some great young men."

With only two players lost to graduation last year, the Tri-Valley Titans volleyball team is in position to defend its 2020 1A DII Idaho Long Pin State Championship.

The Titans went 10-0 in league and 22-2 overall last season, becoming the first team in the Tri-Valley Sports Cooperative to win a championship.

Repeats are difficult, but the Titans are only missing two players from their championship team.

Zoe Erick, played middle and defensive player, and Larissa Hansen was an outside and defensive player. Those players have since graduated, but expected to fill the void for Erick is junior Maren Hansen.

Exactly who is going to replace Hansen was still an open question as of Aug. 17.

"For Larissa, I have a couple of players that I'm hoping will step up," said Titans head coach Jennifer Uhlenkott.

Uhlenkott is fortunate to return three key players in Bailey Whitener, Abigale Atnip, and Amanda Uhlenkott.

"They bring a lot back to the team and have a great connection," Uhlenkott said.

Amanda Uhlenkott was named the 2020 Long Pin MVP and received First Team All-State honors. She received Co-MVP Long Pin honors in 2019.

Whitener was a 2020 Long Pin Honorable Mention and an All-State Honorable Mention.

"Amanda is a great team leader and setter," Uhlenkott said. "Bailey is able to play anywhere and thrives on a quick tempo offense. Abigale leads the team as our Libero."

Teams that are expected to be competitive this year are Horseshoe Bend and Council, according to Uhlenkott.

Uhlenkott, now in her 10th season as head coach, believes her team can repeat.

"We are fortunate that we only lost two from last season, so now we need to fine tune," she said. "All but one on my varsity roster contributed last year. Hansen, Tyler and Hadley Atnip all played mostly varsity last year."

It all started in Weiser for BSU's Herberg

City of Weiser's David Tate will never forget Dylan Herberg

By Philip A. Janwart

Everyone has dreams. Dylan Herberg is no different.

When he was a kid growing up in the small town of Weiser, his vision was zeroed in on a future playing football on the blue turf at Boise State University.

What separated him from other kids with similar dreams was commitment.

Now a 6-2, 230-pound edge linebacker, he is living the dream he refused to let slip away.

"I got to carry the hammer out after my very first start," said Herberg, who is now entering his junior season as a Bronco. "I've carried it a couple times now. The first time was when we had fans; it was on the blue, so that was just ... an unreal experience, running out with 37,000 screaming fans."

Herberg first walked onto a football field as a youth player in Weiser, the feeling not quite as exhilarating as leading his team onto the blue turf, but nonetheless exciting, if not completely adding.

"I played with Coach [David] Tate," he explained. "There were two teams in Weiser and we'd go play Ontario and Payette. I just kind of fell in love with the atmosphere and all the buddies. Yeah, Weiser is where it all started."

Tate now works as the city clerk for the City of Weiser.

"He was one of those special kids and over the years you have a few of those where you know that there is just something special there," Tate said. "It was fifth and sixth grade football ... and you just tried to find a way to get the football into his hands."

Weiser is also the place where Herberg became an avid hunter, his late grandfather, Ken Blondu, taking him hunting and fishing on a regular basis.

"I was probably shooting a gun before I did anything else," said Herberg, during a Zoom interview, a deer mount visible on the wall behind him. "Dad and grandpa taught me. Grandpa taught me about football, too. He played for the Coast Guard Academy."

"You can have dreams, but ... Your work ethic and your attitude have to match your goal."

Life changed in seventh grade when his family moved to Boise where he eventually attended Timberline High School, racking up a stellar career, his goal to play for Boise State still clearly set.

He earned All-SIC Honorable Mention as a junior. In 2017, he recorded 105 tackles, adding five interceptions and 15 tackles-for-loss, earning Idaho 5A First Team and All-Southern Idaho Conference First Team defensive honors.

He was closer now, but dreams can come with a sliver of doubt.

"It was my goal to play at Boise State," Herberg said. "We had season tickets since I can remember, but then you get older. You realize how it's a pretty big-time program and you're like, 'Oh, that's going to be kind of hard to make it.'"

Playing at Timberline, however, turned out to be a good stepping-stone.

Former Timberline Offensive Coordinator Michael Christianson was one of the guys that helped him along.

Christianson served as offensive line coach on Jon Gruden's 2003 Tampa Bay Buccaneers Super Bowl XXXVII team. Most recently, he was an assistant running backs coach and director of technology for the San Francisco 49ers (2011-2013).

"I can tell you this: I've coached a lot of guys in 20-plus years. I don't know that I've ever coached a guy with a stronger work ethic than Dylan," Christianson said. "I coached Frank Gore, for Heaven's sake, and his work ethic is comparable to Frank's, if not better. I can't speak highly enough of the guy."

"He played both ways, every snap. He played slot receiver for us. He never came out of the game and by half time, he had already played a full game."

Some times I think maybe we relied on him a little too much because by the end of the game, he could hardly stand."

David Tate said almost the same thing.

"I remember one game, we were losing badly and we made the decision ... we had to start throwing to Dylan. We just started throwing the ball to this kid and they started punting two and three guys on him because he would just go up and come down with the ball."

"He was taking a beating out there, but he would just come back in and the next play we would go to him again, and we would throw him the ball. He had kids hanging all over him, but he would go up and get the ball, and it became a nail-biter. We came within just a few yards of winning the game."

It was that same selflessness and physical sacrifice that caught the attention of college recruiters.

While still at Timberline, Herberg began looking at schools beyond Boise, including the University of Idaho, but circled back to Boise State where he ultimately made the team as a redshirt walk-on.

He had made it, but like most freshmen saw a long road ahead.

"I was a little nervous, but you know what you are there for, and you just have to step back, too, and know that you're not going to be a starter when you first get there, you're going to red-shirt," Herberg explained. "You get there and see how much bigger and stronger everyone else is and you just have to follow along with the process."

The process resulted in a 20-pound weight gain and bolstered confidence.

"I started playing at fall camp and started making a couple plays and I was like, 'Alright, now I've just got to do it.' I started playing every game, unless I was injured."

Guys like Carolina Panthers center Matt Paradis have served as inspiration for small-town guys looking to make college rosters. Paradis played eight-man football in Council, Idaho before walking on at Boise State and becoming the starting center. He was drafted by the Denver Broncos in 2014 and won a Super Bowl ring along with Hall of Fame quarterback Peyton Manning.

In 2019, he signed a three-year deal with the Panthers worth $27 million.

Herberg also credits the example set by Leighton Vander Esch, a former Boise State linebacker from Riggs, Idaho, for helping him to believe.

Vander Esch is another small town kid - like Paradis, he played eight-man football - trying to make a big dream come true. Boise State provided the opportunity.

Vander Esch took it from there.

Ultimately, he was drafted in 2018 by the Dallas Cowboys, joining other former Broncos, including Kellen Moore, who became the team's offensive coordinator.

"It was kind of the same story as me: he showed up smaller than the size they want you to be for your position," he said. "But Boise State is really good. All the Idaho kids, pretty much right now, that are on the roster are all walk-ons, so you just agree with that and know that they'll give you your fair shot that a lot of programs won't."

Herberg said all of the hard work is "100 percent worth it," and wouldn't trade his experience as a Bronco.

With another couple years of eligibility, he'll continue to play, but has already served as another example of what small town kids can accomplish.

"Yeah, every kid has a dream," he said. "You can have dreams, but you have to set specific goals and specific ideas of what you want to do. Your work ethic and your attitude have to match your goal."

It comes down to sacrifice and doing the things that need to be done for a greater cause.

"It entails making decisions other people don't want to make," Herberg said. "Coach [Bryan] Harsin used to say a lot, 'Success follows hard work.' Sometimes it means you don't get to hang out with your friends as much ... or it means you can't go out and party - you can't do that stuff."

Herberg said it will be great to return to a full house in the fall after playing for a very limited crowd during COVID.

"Oh, we've been waiting," he said. "You want to play in front of people. It just changes the whole atmosphere. The blue is not the blue without 37,000 crazy, screaming fans."
